"Song Without End" introduces Liszt, at 26, at the peak of his fame as Europe's greatest concert pianist, but wanting to abandon the piano in order to write his own musical compositions

On a concert tour, Liszt meets the beautiful Capucine, who recognizes that Liszt can compose music which will give him more enduring fame than his great virtuosity as the world's pre-eminent pianist.

Screenplay by DIANA MORGAN

Based on an adaptation by LEOPOLD ATLAS of a story by SIDNEY HARMON

Produced by HELEN WINSTON • Directed by PHILIP LEACOCK

A HELEN WINSTON PRODUCTION • A COLUMBIA PICTURES RELEASE

Diana Morgan's screenplay is concerned with the poisonous blight of religious prejudice on the devoted friendship that springs up between a little Jewish girl, Miss Parry, and a sturdy little Catholic boy, Master Needs. In a series of charming vignettes, Director Leacock beautifully delineates the friendship that develops between the two children, a friendship that survives even the crisis arising when a pet dies and is buried with proper Catholic rites and the Jewish prayer for the dead.

But the shadow of religious prejudice weighs heavily on their lives and threatens to overwhelm them. They overcome the problem with typical childish logic and disregard for adult narrow-mindedness and, in so doing, provide the central and provocative theme of "Hand in Hand."

STORY

Marcus Numidius, a Roman tribune sent to Armenia to put down a gladiators' revolt, captures the rebels' popular leader, Asclepius. Princess Amira, ambitious to be queen and jealous of Asclepius' popularity, plans his death in the arena by substituting a lion for his human opponent. Marcus helps the triumphant Asclepius crush Amira and her foreign mercenaries. Asclepius, mortally wounded, is buried with honors by the Romans.

In "The Wackiest Ship in the Army," Lemmon plays a wartime Navy lieutenant who eagerly awaits his first command, and finally gets it: a beat-up sailing vessel whose structure and parts are a complete mystery to his crew, seamen nurtured on steam.

Lemmon first must teach his clumsy crew how to sail the vessel preparatory to executing a major military mission. Disguised as a Pacific trading vessel, the ship must be taken into Japanese-held waters to drop Australian scout Rafferty on an enemy-held island so as to obtain vitally needed military information. Lemmon's troubles are many, and delightful; he and his crew lead a truly wacky life aboard their floating museum piece.

Yul Brynner demonstrates, in the new Stanley Donen production, "Once More, With Feeling," that he is as much at home in modern sophisticated comedy as he is in swashbuckling spectacle. If anything, Brynner is even more powerful a screen personality, according to a Hollywood which currently is cheering his performance as a temperamental music maestro.

Lovely Kay Kendall co-stars with Brynner in the Columbia release. The beautiful actress appears as Brynner's equally temperamental wife, matching his flights of emotional fancy with some delightful pyrotechnics and madcap clowning uniquely her own.

Screenplay for "Once More, With Feeling" was penned by Harry Kurnitz from his own successful Broadway stage play, the happy comedy of musical genius whose egocentricities are kept in check by his wife . . . until she discovers him "auditioning" a sultry young pianist. She walks out on him, and his career promptly starts skidding.

"The Mouse That Roared" is the joyous story of Grand Fenwick, the smallest country in the world, which declares war on America in order to be defeated and splendidly rehabilitated by a generous victor.

Sellers "invades" a New York whose streets are deserted because of an air raid drill. Unaware of the fact that he is supposed to lose the "war," Sellers captures a U. S. Army general and four bewildered New York cops. He also scoops up a dreadful new instrument of destruction, as well as its inventor and his assistant.

The fact that the world's tiniest nation now possesses the new weapon creates consternation among the statesmen of the big countries. America promptly sues for peace and Fenwick, at the head of a League of Little Nations, finally grants it.

The players in this happy satire are completely wonderful, Sellers for his delightful triple-performing and Miss Seberg for her light comedy.

Based on the novel by ALAN HACKNEY

Produced by ROY BOULTING

Directed by JOHN BOULTING

Carmichael is seen as a sort of educated simpleton who, demobilized from the Army, seeks employment in industry. His illusions of being the executive type are quickly dispelled in uproarious encounters with the candy and detergent industries. His uncle, a conniving industrialist, puts the naive youngster to work as a laborer in his missile factory. Here, Carmichael's enthusiasm leads to a strike, which rapidly assumes national proportions under the diligent guidance of unionist Sellers, who is unaware that the troubles which befall him thereafter are not really of his making.

Who was that Lady?

When Curtis, a handsome chemistry professor, is caught by his wife, Janet Leigh, in something other than intellectual pursuit of one of his more attractive students, a chain-reaction of laugh-provoking complications is exploded. Friend and TV writer Martin comes to Tony's aid (?); he evolves an elaborate story that Curtis really is an FBI agent who was bussing the pretty scholar in line of duty.

The film's fantastic climax takes place in the sub-basements of the Empire State Building; here Curtis and Martin, believing themselves prisoners on an enemy submarine, patriotically try to scuttle the vessel and succeed only in rocking the building.

One of the funniest scenes ever put on film!

A heartwarming, sometimes roistering and always enjoyable story of a girl from Maine who tangles with a railroad tycoon from New York,

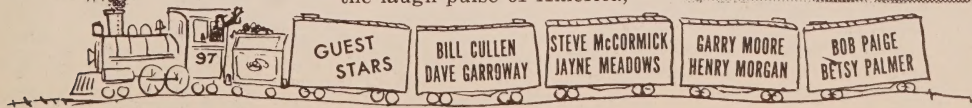

The fight starts when a shipment of lobsters from Doris Day is mishandled as a result of railroad tycoon Kovacs' penny-pinching; Doris wants triple damages, sues and wins. This is too much for Kovacs;

The battle royal makes Miss Day a national heroine. She personifies every individual who ever got pushed around. And the fact that she fights back, and the manner of that fight-back, captures "the laugh pulse of America,"

What a team!

TYRONE POWER KIM NOVAK

THE EDDY DUCHIN STORY

CO-STARRING REX THOMPSON · JAMES WHITMORE
WITH SHEPPERD STRUDWICK AND INTRODUCING VICTORIA SHAW

Tyrone Power is shown as an enthusiastic youngster whose spectacular ability skyrockets him to justly deserved fame. The romance between Power as Duchin and Miss Novak as socialite Marjorie Oelrichs is presented with heart-warming simplicity; their marriage is as compelling and as triumphant as the music by Duchin.

Marjorie's death, on a Christmas Eve, drives Duchin out of New York, away from their baby son and the scenes so intimately associated with his supreme happiness. When, years later, he is persuaded to return, Duchin finds himself unable to talk to a resentful young son, and again he flees.

Most of the numbers played in the film are tunes identified with the beloved pianist, each rendered in what is known as "the Duchin manner," an individual and distinctive treatment of the music easily recognized by his many admirers.

A thundering story of action during World War II, Stewart plays an Army major who tries in the Columbia Picture to stem the Japanese advance in Eastern China by destroying a vital mountain road. Commanding a squad of battle-weary, bone-tired U. S. Army demolition men, Stewart faces mounting obstacles in the masses of Chinese blindly fleeing the invaders, the indecision of some high Chinese officers and the looting and killing of Chinese bandits.

Convinced that his is a key delaying action, vital to the larger war effort, Stewart proceeds with his lonely task, stripping all emotion from his heart and all physical obstacles from his path. He blows a vital bridge. It remains for Miss Lu to teach him the one lesson he hasn't learned: compassion for the unfortunate on "The Mountain Road."

FLAT ON HIS BACK AGAIN! Once more, Marty fails to convince "The Master Of The Sword" that his brass hat could do with a little knuckle-dusting. But how he tries!

"The Long Gray Line" is based on the autobiography, "Bringing Up the Brass" by the fabulous Sergeant Marty Maher, the pugnacious young Irishman who, as West Point's athletic trainer, "fathered" some 10,000 of the Academy cadets. In depicting the rich experiences of Sergeant Maher, Ford tells a real story of West Point for, true to the book's title, the sergeant really did bring up the brass. Among those who knew Sergeant Maher at West Point were the nation's future generals and ambassadors, even a President of the United States. With the sergeant's love for his Irish bride, played by Miss O'Hara, and his concern for his cadets and their girls, "The Long Gray Line" truly is the story of all America.

Set in the Arizona Territory of the 1890's, "3:10 to Yuma" offers a complete change of characterization pace for Ford.

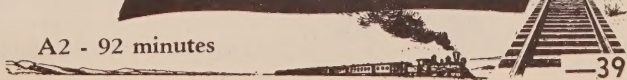

He plays a cold-blooded killer with a pleasant sense of humor. Captured after a stage hold-up and killing, he is shunted from place to place, while his bandit crew try to rescue him before he can be put on the "3:10 to Yuma," out of their reach.

In "Have Rocket, Will Travel" the frantic funnymen are really out of this world. Handymen in a missiles laboratory, the Three Stooges accidentally mix a new rocket fuel which launches them into outer space. On the planet Venus, they have a series of uproarious adventures involving a fire-spouting monster, a kindly unicorn and a devilish Thinking Machine. Returned to Earth, they are greeted as heroes but turn their welcome into a typical slapstick Three Stooges finale.

THE SILENT WORLD TECHNICOLOR®

An eerie sequence shows the skin-divers exploring a sunken cargo ship long covered with marine growth. Its encrusted ship's bell rings with a strange, lost sound when struck, and its cargo of motorcycles and trucks looks odd, indeed, at the bottom of the sea.

In one scene, laughter turns to tragedy as a school of sperm whales playing near the Calypso loses one of its members to the ship's propellers. The whale, a baby, is mortally wounded and must be shot by one of the crew members. Sharks close in on the whale's carcass and begin a savage feast which is cut short by the enraged crew members, who frenziedly haul the predators on deck and kill them.

An underwater race between two skin-divers, one riding a giant turtle and another a "sea-sled," a torpedo-shaped underwater scooter, is another high point of the film.

"The Silent World" is based on Captain Cousteau's best-selling book of the same title, translated into 27 languages, which thrilled millions the world over.

In a picture rich with fascinating episodes from man's encounters with the mysterious deep, certain highlights stand out. Bare skinned divers battle man-eating sharks. The sea around the Calypso comes alive as giant leaping porpoises, thousands of them, fill the air with their convorting. The "fish-men" of the Calypso, down below the limits of safety in the dark sea, battle the dreaded depth narcosis, which tempts men to cast off their life-giving aqua-lungs, and pass into oblivion. And in a scene of high hilarity, the divers tame a giant grouper fish, so that he follows them around like a pet.

A Parents Magazine Family Medal Award winner, JOHNNY HOLIDAY is the heart-warming story of a retired U.S. Cavalry sergeant, a confused boy and a mare and her foal. Filmed in its entirety at the Indiana Boys School, it tells of the regeneration of a problem twelve year old, turned into a useful citizen through the understanding of an institution where no boy is "bad" . . . A magnificent picture.

Dennis Morgan, Arlene Dahl, Ben Blue, William Frawley

The struggles of Chauncy Olcott, a young tenor at the turn of the century to achieve success on the stage. A fabulous beauty turns him down, but Rose, a pretty Irish girl and a bell hop scheme to further his career against the plotting of Rose's fiance. His big chance comes on St. Patrick's day when the voice of the leading Irish tenor of the day gives out.

ROGUES of SHERWOOD FOREST

John DEREK

Alan HALE

Diana LYNN

Against the rich tapestry of English history when Robin Hood and his son struck a sturdy blow for English liberty, culminating in the cherished Magna Carta, "Rogues of Sherwood Forest" emerges as a rousing romantic adventure that encompasses reckless feats of arms and rash escapades in romance.

Derek, as Robin Hood's son, returns to England to find that wicked King John (George Macready) is ruling with an iron hand. The people groan under the lash of unjust taxes and abridgment of their liberties. Derek strikes a blow against this tyrant's rule but is captured by the king's minions and condemned to death. The king's lovely young ward (Lynn), whom Derek loves, is instrumental in winning the young warrior's freedom.

BLACK GOLD

IN GLORIOUS
CINECOLOR

STARRING ANTHONY QUINN
KATHERINE ELYSE
with DE MILLE • KNOX
DUCKY LOUIE • KANE RICHMOND
MORONI OLSEN

Quinn portrays an Oklahoma Indian whose love for the beautiful black mare he owns gets him into difficulty with border characters. It results in his rescue of an American-born Chinese lad whose father has been killed by smugglers. The boy, Ducky Louie, later boots the mare's colt home to victory in America's great Churchill Downs classic.

Tragedy strikes Quinn and his Indian wife soon after an oil gusher is brought in on their Oklahoma ranch. Quinn is injured by a falling plank, and as a result dies before he can see his "dream colt" win America's great horse race. But before he dies he tells his wife that the horse will win the Kentucky Derby, and in doing so will bring added pride to his people.

"Man in the Saddle" gives Scott a perfect vehicle for his rugged talents. He is seen as the owner of a small ranch, a law-abiding citizen who goes out of his way to avoid trouble.

A violent feud erupts, with gunfights and fisticuffs virtually unmatched in the history of outdoor films.

Scott is wounded in a gun battle with Knox's henchmen, and is nursed by schoolteacher Ellen Drew in a mountain hideout. Knox, believing erroneously that his own wife has run off with Scott, has it out with his ex-rival in a blazing gunfight.

POWER OF THE RESURRECTION

It emphasizes the real meaning of the resurrection for all time for everyone. In it we see the aged Peter, a young man—filled with fear, and others in prison. Their very lives are at stake, torture and death are in store for them—except for one thing, faith in the resurrected Christ. The power of the resurrection has meaning for them after Peter relates the story of Jesus' last days on earth. Flash-backs of this event make graphic the story.
